Senator Hearst Know How to Spell Bird.

THE GREAT AMERICAN BRAIN.

Kennan's Iron Chain and Suit of Convict Clothes—Woman's Rights at the Capitol—Mrs. Burnetts Return, etc.

Stories of Statesmen.

Copyright 1890, by Frank G. Carpenter.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—(Special Correspondence of The Bee.)—George Hearst, the millionaire senator from California, is bringing his mining knowledge to bear on the republic about Washington, and during the past week he has invested in some canal coal veins in West Virginia which, I am told, will make him another fortune. Thomas Jefferson Clinch, one of the new representatives from San Francisco, went with Hearst to make the purchase and he tells the story.

"The trip taught me how Hearst made his fortune. It showed me that he was a sharp business man, and this West Virginia sale will give you a good insight into his character. We found the coal veins all right. There were several of them, each of which had its price and each of which contained a different variety of coal. The owners began to expatiate upon their virtues as soon as we arrived. The vein they particularly wanted to sell was 3,000 feet up the mountain side. They had samples of it at the foot of the hill, and the vein looked well from the distance. The samples were fine, the price was low, and I expected to see Hearst snap at the offer. As he did not I asked:

"What's the matter, senator?"

"Well," replied Senator Hearst, "I don't like to buy a pig in a poke and we had better crawl up and see that coal for ourselves before we discuss the price." With that we crawled up to the vein, and Senator Hearst took a piece of the coal and lit it with a match. Canoe coal will burn like turpentine. The lump the senator lit did burn when the match touched it, but a moment later it went out, and the senator said:

"There, Clinch, that's no good. There are other varieties of coal than canoe coal which will burn upon being lit, but the best canoe coal will continue to burn until it is reduced to ashes. This piece is not canoe coal at all and would not give a blank for this vein if we could get it for nothing."

"We then sampled another vein, going through the same process. Senator Hearst put a big chunk of carbon on the ground and lit it and as it cracked away he watched as a mother does her first born. When it was half consumed I said: "Well, senator, are you satisfied now?"

"No, I'm not," replied Senator Hearst, and he kept his eyes on the blazing lump for fully ten minutes longer. At the end of that time the fire had died out and only a heap of gray ashes remained on the ground. Senator Hearst then said:

"That settles it, and he thereupon went to the West Virginia and bought the vein. It is a valuable property and it will probably make him a great deal of money. It was in this same way that he made millions in the gold mines of California. He looked at every mine he bought for himself and the most of them he invested in he bought upon option, working them for six months, and if they paid out as represented, buying them at the end of that time outright. The result was that he always made and never lost. Some call his good fortune luck. I call it brains."

THE NATIONAL BRAIN DEPARTMENT.

I dropped into the congressional library this afternoon and asked Mr. Spofford as to the condition of the great American brain.

Mr. Spofford is the man who has the copyrights in the United States and every intellectual enterprise that starts here comes to him. He is a very little man, with a thin nose and a thin mustache, and a face as dark as that of a Spaniard and with a body which is the personification of nervous activity. His forehead is broad, his eyes are as black as jet, and his thick hair and beard are now tinged with gray. During the past twenty-five years he has by proxy contributed more to the Congressional Record than any man in Washington. Congressmen go to him for all sorts of information and get it. He has the title of every one of the half million odd books in the biggest library of the country on his tongue, and he knows where to find information on all topics from cooking to theology. He is a man of many literary friendships and there is scarcely an author in the country who does not know him. He hob-nobs with the senators and when I entered the library old Father Jerome Edmunds was chatting amicably with him on the limitations of the intellect. Edmunds had just been shining like the head of a boy's new drum and his severe eyes were jumping with enthusiasm as he argued with the librarian. He left a moment after I entered and I went with Mr. Spofford into one of the narrow alcoves and talked with him as to our intellectual progress.

"Yes," said he, "the great American brain is steadily growing. We have more applications for copyrights every year, and there is a wonderful intellectual activity just now in the making of art, dramatic and musical works. A great deal of poetry is being written, and during the past year 41,000 literary inventions were entered in this intellectual patent office. A great part of our copyright now comes from applications for paper letters, and I sometimes receive as many as twenty applications a day for such things. The literary activity is steadily growing, and we now have more than 625,000 volumes in the library building."

"I asked as to the library building."

"It will be pushed as soon as spring opens," replied Mr. Spofford, and the people will be surprised at how fast we can build when we get to work. We are now waiting for grants, but in one day last fall we laid $1,000 bricks and in another day the building is an imperative necessity, and it will be pushed along as fast as possible."

WHAT THE WRITERS ARE DOING.

Speaking of literary matters I understand that Henry Adams is still at work upon his history of the United States, about his own administration. He has had four volumes of this work already published and he is now looking over the proofs and giving his literary advice. The work is completed will be a very valuable one and Mr. Adams has the advantage of the valuable papers of John Quincy Adams and John Adams in the preparation of it.

The biography of Lincoln by Nicolay and Hay is being prepared for book form. John G. Nicolay is editing the matter and reading the proofs and there is no doubt that he and Mr. Hay will make considerably more than $50,000 which they received for the manuscript from the Century company out of the sale of the book.

I see that George Kennan, the Siberian explorer, has valued at $100,000 the most advanced part of the capital, and they cost Kennan, I am told, $20,000. He will undoubtedly make something out of it.

Mr. Kennan is making corals of money out of his lectures. I chatted with Adele, the assistant secretary of state, about her other day. He said: "Kennan's suit of prison clothes and the iron chain which he brought with him from Siberia. America has already brought him $50,000, and she is adding to his bank account every night. At the close of every lecture he appears before the audience in a new suit, and he finds it a successful feature. Major Lord, the lecturer manager of New York, told me that Kennan was his best card. Said he: 'I have booked more than $10,000 worth of contracts for him this season, and he is the best paying lecturer in the field. One of his secrets of success lies in the fact that he prepared himself well before going on the stage, and another is the splendid advertisement which the Century Magazine has given him.'"

Doctor Harnett, the dark-eyed husband of Frances Hodgson Burnett, tells me that she is growing better in London and that she will return home as soon as she is able to travel. She was preparing to come to America when she was thrown from the carriage and has been unable to do so literary work to speak of since then. She has some plans mapped out for future work, but nothing in manuscript or in well advanced preparation. Dr. Burnett says that "Little Lord Fauntleroy" said very well as a book and as a play. Eighty thousand copies of the book were sold and it is still selling widely. The original "Little Lord Fauntleroy" is now in Washington going to school. It is, or rather, he is the son of Doctor and Mrs. Harnett.

STANTON'S GREATLY FINE.

The cartridges which Senator Ingalls received by mail from Mississippi a week ago brings to me a curious reminiscence of Secretary Stanton. It was during the stormiest days of the war just before the emancipation proclamation had been issued and when a colored man was the prominent factor in every man's mind. Stanton was sitting around his family table one evening when a bundle of mail was brought him direct from the postoffice. It is there was a little package of about the size of the box which held the cartridges received by Senator Ingalls. The package was opened and inside the colored man was the prominent factor in every man's mind.
